1. PERSONAL PROFILE

Name: Satyabrata Das

Native State: Odisha, India

Family Roots: My entire family—including my parents, siblings and relatives—has been dwelling in Odisha from ancestral times.

I come from Odisha, the sacred land of Lord Jagannath, whom I reverentially regard as the real divine deity manifest in this universe in Kaliyug. Odisha's sacred geography and spiritual traditions have deeply influenced my values, outlook and sense of responsibility toward living beings.

2. THE SACRED LAND OF ODISHA

Place	Sacred Khetra	Spiritual Association
Puri	Shankha Khetra	Primary seat of Lord Jagannath — the younger brother
Kendrapara	Tulasi Khetra	Primary seat of Lord Balabhadra — the elder brother
Jajpur	Gada Khetra	Primary seat of Goddess Biraja — representing divine feminine Shakti
Bhubaneswar	Ekamra Khetra	Primary seat of Lord Lingaraj — representing Lord Shiva

3. EDUCATIONAL BACKGROUND

Qualification	Institution / Details	Year
B.Tech / B.E. — Electronics & Telecommunication	Synergy Institute of Engineering and Technology, Dhenkanal, Odisha; under Utkal University	2005
Intermediate Science & Schooling	Saraswati Vidya Mandir, Nalconagar, Angul, Odisha	—

During my school years, Mathematics, Computer and Physics were my favourite subjects. This interest naturally led me toward higher studies in Engineering.

4. PROFESSIONAL & TECHNICAL JOURNEY

From 2012 to 2018, I acquired practical knowledge across several technical domains, including Engineering Automation (PLC, SCADA, DCS and HMI), Web Stack Development, Data Warehousing (ETL), C Language, HTML, CSS and JavaScript. This period strengthened my technical foundation and broadened my ability to learn across disciplines.

5. THE TRANSFORMATION — FROM TECHNICAL PROFESSIONAL TO CAREGIVER

Although my formal education and career are rooted in technology, my personal hobbies, character, behaviour and the way I treat my surroundings gradually defined me as an ethical rescuer and caregiver. After many years of observation and experience, this became a central purpose of my life.

From the age of 15, driven by compassion, honesty and a protective instinct, I chose a purely ethical and environmental vegan and ascetic lifestyle. I believe these values were strongly influenced by the morality instilled by my parents, for whom I remain deeply grateful and proud.

“My professional education shaped what I can do; my conscience shaped what I choose to do.”

6. LEARNING TO CARE FOR DOGS

From 2018 to 2020, I learned the practical aspects of caring for dogs at Waggcity. I began under the supervision of Mr. Anurag Sahay Verma and subsequently developed my practical, real-life caregiving experience by gradually implementing what I learned in Waggcity.

7. MY LIFE PURPOSE

I want to provide rescue and caregiving service to every needy living being throughout my life, unconditionally for animals and birds, and conditionally for human beings. I wish to continue this service for as long as my organs remain fit and capable of supporting the work.

8. WHAT 28 YEARS OF OBSERVATION HAVE TAUGHT ME

Now, at 43+, I reflect on roughly 28 years of observation. I have seen a common pattern in human life: people work, earn money, and use that money to maintain themselves and their families and to secure their future. Animals and birds also live according to their own survival needs and natural vision.

Some highly ambitious people work extremely hard to attain prestigious positions and, after achieving them, pursue increasingly luxurious and comfortable lives. At the same time, scientists, doctors, engineers and other highly educated people may devote themselves to major projects and knowledge, yet I believe humanity must also ask a larger question: how can we make Earth better and preserve it as a lasting home for life, rather than allowing the pursuit of comfort and expansion to eclipse compassion and responsibility?

Wealthy, kind and highly educated people may generously donate to NGOs, rescue and rehabilitation centres working for elderly people, orphan children, mentally challenged persons, street animals, birds and nature. Such contributions are valuable. But I believe there is another question worth asking: have we personally examined our own responsibilities toward the living beings and environment immediately around us?

9. WHY RESCUERS, CAREGIVERS & PROTECTORS ARE NEEDED

If every person—from economically poor communities to middle-class families and highly privileged sections—performed their responsibilities in the right direction and cared for their immediate surroundings, perhaps there would be far less need for dedicated rescuers, caregivers, activists and protectors. Humanity would naturally blossom everywhere.

Reality, however, is more complicated. In every category of society, I have observed people knowingly or unknowingly causing exploitation, injustice, atrocities and suffering, often explaining their actions through limitations or circumstances. Therefore, some people dedicate their lives to rescuing, caring, protecting and standing beside those who genuinely need help.

These people do not necessarily promise the world anything. They make a promise to their own conscience: to help, to stand up and to care when someone is genuinely in need.

10. THE OTHER SIDE OF RESCUE WORK

Alongside genuine rescuers, caregivers and activists, fraudulent or inhuman actors can also exist. Genuine work is often difficult to prove through appearances alone because real rescuers may sacrifice income, comfort, social recognition and ordinary life in order to fulfil their responsibilities.

Sometimes society misunderstands such people, calling them “mad”, “mentally challenged” or using other labels simply because their priorities differ from conventional expectations. I believe that choosing compassion over comfort should not be mistaken for a lack of reason.

“A rescuer may look unusual to society, but conscience can be the strongest evidence of sanity.”

11. MY VALUES

Compassion: To reduce suffering wherever I can.

Honesty: To act truthfully and transparently.

Protection: To stand for beings who cannot protect themselves.

Responsibility: To care for my immediate surroundings instead of waiting for someone else.

Ethical Living: To align lifestyle and action with conscience and respect for life.

Service: To make caregiving a lifelong responsibility rather than a temporary activity.

12. A PERSONAL DECLARATION

I do not present myself as perfect. I present myself as someone who has chosen a direction. My technical education, life experiences, observations and caregiving practice have gradually brought me toward a life centred on ethical service. I want my remaining years to be useful to living beings who need protection, care and a voice.

My aspiration is simple: wherever suffering exists and wherever I am capable of helping, I want my conscience to guide my action. I wish to continue learning, rescuing, caregiving and protecting—with compassion, honesty and responsibility—throughout my life.

“Service to life begins when responsibility extends beyond oneself.”

CONCLUSION

A reflection on service, responsibility and a meaningful life

To be a true service provider in rescuing, caregiving, and protecting the needy among street animals is not merely a profession—it is a surrender of one's time, comfort, and personal desires to a higher moral purpose. A job holder may carry many responsibilities, but to carry both a conventional career and the conscience of a rescuer is a rare burden few can sustain. For when a person chooses to stand beside the voiceless, there is often little time left for himself. Yet perhaps that is the paradox of a meaningful life: the more one gives to those who cannot repay, the less of life remains for oneself—and the more meaningful that life becomes.

In a nutshell:

“A job may provide a livelihood; rescuing, caregiving and protecting the voiceless demands a life. To carry both responsibilities within one human being is rare—for when one dedicates his time to those who have no voice, little time remains for himself. Perhaps this is the highest form of service: to lose one's comfort while becoming a reason for another life to survive.”
