BABY

My Daughter, My Responsibility, My Life.

A TRUE STORY OF LOVE, CARE & COMPASSION

From the banks of Ganga... to the corner
of my heart.

HOW IT ALL BEGAN

I was working on a project of our company inside NTPC Barh, Bihar. For my two rescued puppies Pagulu and Pagili, I had rented a well-fenced area with rooms and open space. Very near, I had another rented room where I stayed.

PAGULU

PAGILI

1 I HEARD HER CRY

One night I heard "Mein..." I searched but couldn't find her. Another weekend, I heard again... This time I found her on the top floor.

2 SHE BECAME MY DAUGHTER

I introduced myself. She allowed me to touch and pamper. Gradually, she became my Daughter.

3 A NEW LIFE OUTSIDE

With the owner's permission, I took her outside to roam among other goats. She was happy. She was free.

4 A NEW CHAPTER

After about a year, the owner asked me to take her to a male goat. She came back home.

5 TWO LITTLE MIRACLES

After some months, Baby gave birth to two male baby goats. One white, one black. I helped her during the birth and took responsibility for all three.

This is BABY
The day I found you,
I accepted you as my Daughter.

YOU GOT SICK, MY BABY

You became sick. I took you to the hospital. Doctors tried, I tried, my prayers tried...

But I couldn't save you. After about a month, you left me... I buried you at night near Muslim open graveyard. You will always be in my heart.

Rest in Peace,
My Baby

YOUR TWO SONS, MY RESPONSIBILITY

After you, your two sons were my world. The owner wanted to sell them to the butcher. I requested him not to. I offered to buy them for a higher price. He refused...

help

"I couldn't save them...
But I will never stop trying for every life that crosses my path."

HER STORY

Baby was brought from the bank of Ganga during rituals. Many baby goats are thrown in the water, some die, some are rescued. She was not cared for properly. She called for food and water... and I started responding.

Before 10 AM and after 7 PM, I personally took care of her.

6 THE PROMISE

I requested the butcher not to sell or kill them. I had no money then. I promised, I will bring them back. I went to him every day, before and after office, with folded hands.

7 I BROUGHT HIM BACK... BUT LOST HIS BROTHER

When my salary came, I went with ₹10,000. He gave me the black one... But told me the white one was sick and died. Later I came to know he was killed that day... My heart broke.

8 MY BLACK SON

I brought him home by paying ₹5,000. Every day 7-9 AM and 4-6 PM, I took him outside to graze with me.

9 ONE MORE GOODBYE

After a year, in next winter, he also fell sick with the same disease. Doctors tried... But I lost him too. I buried him near his mother. Mother and son, together again.

RESCUE IS NOT

A TRUE STORY OF LOVE, CARE & COMPASSION

BABY — THE DAUGHTER I NEVER PLANNED TO HAVE

My Rescue & Caring Journey in Barh, Bihar

A personal story of my rescued goats.

This is not a story that I planned to tell. It is a story that happened to me. A story about a place in Barh, Bihar... Two rescued puppies... A female goat whom I eventually called my daughter... And two little lives who came into this world under my care. But most importantly... this is a story about what animals can teach us about love, trust and responsibility.

HOW IT ALL BEGAN

At that time, I had been appointed to work on a running project of my company inside NTPC Barh. For my two rescued puppies, Pagulu and Pagili, I had rented a well-fenced area. There were two tin-and-asbestos-roofed rooms, four walls and some open space where the puppies could play safely. Very close to that place, I rented another small room. It was mainly meant for keeping my official documents and electronic instruments. If my senior officers visited the site, I could also use that room for their rest. But during that period... I was staying there myself.

THE FIRST CRY

One night... I suddenly heard a sound. '□□□...' It sounded like a baby goat. I felt something was wrong. I came outside and started searching around the nearby area. But the sound stopped. I couldn't find her. So eventually... I returned to my room and went to sleep.

I FOUND HER

Then, one weekend... I heard the same voice again. But this time it was different. She was calling repeatedly... with small gaps between each cry. I started searching again. This time I searched higher. I went toward the upper floor... and finally... I found her. That was the first time I met her.

SHE BECAME MY DAUGHTER

I introduced myself to her. And somehow... I accepted her as my daughter. She allowed me to touch her. She allowed me to pamper her. And slowly... she began trusting me.

"Sometimes family is not born into our lives. Sometimes family finds us."

HER STORY

Gradually, I came to know more about her past. I learned that she had been brought from the bank of the Ganga during a period of religious and family rituals. There were stories of young goats being left in or near the river, and some animals being rescued by people. There were also situations where different people claimed ownership of rescued animals. I cannot speak for an entire community or tradition. I can only speak about what I personally encountered... and what I saw happen to Baby.

LEARNING TO CARE

The family (the owner of my rented room) living there had once hoped to start a goat farm. But Baby was not being cared for properly. She would call for food. She would call for water. And I began responding to her calls. Before 10 in the morning... and again after 7 in the evening... I personally took care of her.

"Care creates understanding. Understanding creates a bond."

A NEW LIFE OUTSIDE

I requested the owner to allow her to go outside. Thankfully, permission was given. So I began taking Baby outside... toward the area where other goats were roaming. She could finally move around. Explore. Graze. And simply... be a goat.

TWO LITTLE MIRACLES

About a year later... the owner told me that Baby was ready to mate. He asked me to take her to a male goat. There was a person nearby who was involved in cow and goat breeding. So Baby went there... and eventually came back home. After some months... Baby gave birth to two male baby goats. One was white. The other was black. I personally helped her during the birth. And from that moment... my responsibility became three times greater.

YOU GOT SICK, MY BABY

Baby was their mother. But in my heart... all three had become my responsibility. But then... Baby became sick. The family who owned her was not taking care of her properly. So I took responsibility. I took her to an animal hospital. I consulted doctors. I tried again and again. It was winter. I brought a room heater for her. I fed her. I cleaned her place. I tried to keep everything hygienic. I prayed for her. The doctors tried. I tried. But sometimes... love cannot defeat death.

After about a month... Baby died. I buried her at night... near a Muslim open graveyard. I did not care about the differences between us. She was my daughter. And I wanted to give her a respectful farewell.

"Rest in peace, my Baby."

YOUR TWO SONS, MY RESPONSIBILITY

After Baby was gone... her two sons remained. The white one... and the black one. I took responsibility for both of them. One day... I learned that the owner wanted to sell them to a butcher. I requested him not to. I offered to buy them myself. Even though he wanted more money than they were originally worth... I agreed.

THE PROMISE

But at that moment... I didn't have the money. My salary normally came between the 8th and 12th of the month. So I requested the butcher: 'Please keep them safe. Don't sell them. Don't kill them. I will come with the money.' That day... the white baby goat looked directly into my eyes. He was only about six months old. And something happened that I can never forget. I felt... as if he had lost hope in me. As if he was saying: 'You came... but you couldn't take me with you.' He didn't try to come toward me. But the black one cried... and tried to come toward me.

"I will bring you back. I will take you to my shelter. And as long as I live... I will take care of you."

I BROUGHT HIM BACK

From that day... before and after my office hours... I went to that place. I kept requesting the butcher: 'Please don't sell them. Please don't kill them. I will bring the money. Just keep them safe.' I even stood before his house with folded hands. Sometimes I knelt down. People might have thought I was foolish. Maybe even mad. He told me: 'Why are you doing all this? Bring the money and take them.' He had bought them for around ₹3,000. I had promised to pay ₹10,000.

THE WHITE SON WAS GONE

Then my salary arrived. I went there... with ₹10,000. He told me to come to his house. I agreed. I waited. Someone told me to wait because they would bring the goats. After about an hour... the black goat finally came. I asked: 'Where is the white one?' He told me... the white goat had become sick... and died. He said he had thrown the body into the Ganga. I started crying. I asked him: 'Why did you keep telling me that they were safe?'

MY BLACK SON

Then I looked at the black goat. He was extremely weak. He could barely walk properly. I asked: 'How are you taking care of him?' I was angry. I was heartbroken. He shouted at me. He told me to leave immediately. He even threatened that he would take the goat away. I managed to bring him back. I paid ₹5,000 that day. And I took him with me.

ONE MORE GOODBYE

But the story did not have the ending I prayed for. About a year later... during another winter... he became sick. It was similar to the illness Baby had suffered from. I took him for veterinary treatment. The government veterinary doctors tried to help. But there was nothing more they could do. And then... I lost him too. I buried him near the place where his mother, Baby, had been buried.

"Mother and son. Together again."

WHAT THEY TAUGHT ME

Baby taught me something I will never forget. An animal does not need to understand our language to understand our intentions. They know who feeds them. They know who protects them. They know who comes back for them. And sometimes... they wait.

RESCUE IS MORE THAN SAVING

People often think rescue means simply taking an animal away from danger. But rescue is much more than that. Rescue means feeding. Cleaning. Treatment. Protection. Patience. Understanding. And sometimes... staying beside an animal even when you know you may not be able to save its life.

THE LESSON OF BABY

If you ever see an animal in distress... don't immediately think: 'It is only an animal.' Stop. Look at them. They can feel fear. They can feel hunger. They can feel pain. And they can also feel kindness. You may not be able to save every animal. I couldn't save Baby. I couldn't save her white son. I couldn't save her black son. But that does not mean we should stop trying.

MY PROMISE CONTINUES

Today, my rescue journey continues. Pagulu and Pagili are part of that journey. Every animal I meet reminds me of Baby. Every rescue reminds me of the promise I once made to her.

FOR THE REST OF MY LIFE

Baby came into my life unexpectedly. I did not plan to adopt her. I did not plan to become her caregiver. I did not even know that a goat could become my daughter. But she did. And for the rest of my life... I will remember her that way.

Her name was Baby. She was a goat. But to me... she was my daughter.

"May every animal find someone... who chooses to care."
