

A TRUE STORY OF A MALE CALF

One night. One injured life. One human decision that made the difference.

THE NIGHT OF NH-31

A story of pain, compassion, helplessness — and hope.

A QUESTION BEFORE THE STORY

How we treat the most helpless beings around us says something profound about who we are. Responsibility, behaviour, compassion and the choices we make when nobody is watching can become a mirror of our moral values.

The cow family has been regarded as sacred and deeply respected in Indian tradition. Whatever our beliefs may be, one principle should remain universal: when an animal is suffering, compassion should come before convenience.

Yet animals have also been used for our milk, meat, labour, money and other needs. The danger begins when necessity turns into exploitation, and exploitation becomes so ordinary that we stop questioning it. “Our ancestors did it” cannot be a moral excuse for causing avoidable suffering. If we pass cruelty to the next generation as a business model, we pass on a failure of humanity.

And then, one night, a small abandoned male calf reminded me what all of this really means.

10:00 PM — ALONE ON THE ROAD

One evening, after completing my work at NTPC Barh, I found myself without any transport to my room. It was around 10 PM. I decided to walk, hoping that someone passing by would give me a lift.

After about 100 metres, I noticed two or three foxes moving together on the left side of NH-31. They seemed to be searching for something. I went closer.

What I saw stopped me.

A male calf was lying severely injured. The foxes were attacking him. He was in such terrible pain that he could barely cry out for help. He could not defend himself.

I immediately drove the foxes away and stayed beside him.

THE RESCUE BAG

Because I regularly try to help animals in distress, I usually carry a small emergency kit: turmeric powder, naphthalene balls, coconut oil, basic medicines, pain-relief medicine, deworming tablets, an antiseptic/wound spray, multivitamins, flattened rice (chuda), biscuits and water. I also keep my official documents safely at my workplace.

That night, with the limited things I had, I sprayed the wound areas with the antiseptic spray, applied turmeric, covered him loosely with branches and moved away to observe. My immediate goal was simple: keep the foxes away until I could find a safer solution.

The foxes returned. They moved around him, but eventually left. I felt a little relief. I prayed for him, repeating Om Namah Shivaya and the Mahamrityunjaya Mantra 11 times while moving around him. It did not replace medical care — but it gave my frightened mind a little strength to continue.

Eventually, after walking nearly a kilometre, a bike rider came along and helped me reach my room. I ate, slept and hoped that the calf would survive the night.

5:00 AM — I COULD NOT STAY AWAY

The next morning, I woke up with one thought: “I cannot leave him there.”

I knew I did not have a large shelter or the facilities to treat a seriously injured calf. So I contacted everyone I could think of and returned to the place at about 5 AM.

I offered him grass, vegetables, roti and some chuda. For three or four hours, I kept asking for help. There was little response. My restlessness grew because I knew that a broken leg and a roadside injury needed more than food and prayers.

Then I remembered Mr. Varun Sharma, owner of Umrob Dental Clinic and a BJP-associated member. I thought: “Perhaps he can help with the rescue, or at least guide me toward someone who can.”

I made photographs and a video of the calf and began searching for nearby cow-rescue organisations. I also received a contact number for a woman involved in animal rescue and shared the calf's condition with her on WhatsApp.

Then came the response I had been waiting for.

Mr. Varun Sharma responded calmly and politely. First, he helped me come out of my overwhelming feeling of helplessness. Then he said, in essence: “Don't worry. I will join you there within an hour. Just share your live location.”

He came. He saw the calf. And together we began searching for a place where the animal could at least be kept safely.

THE FIRST DOOR WAS CLOSED

Mr. Sharma suggested keeping the calf at Gopal Goshala near Nawada Gate, which was nearby. We took the calf there and requested that he be allowed to stay.

At first, permission was refused.

But Mr. Sharma did not simply walk away. He kept explaining the situation and requested that they make an exception for the injured animal. Eventually, the ground-level caretaker agreed to let the calf remain there.

The calf had a temporary place. But one question remained:

What about his broken leg? What about proper medical treatment?

Fortunately, the woman I had contacted called me later that evening with a possible solution. She suggested shifting the calf to a goshala in Aurangabad where better care could be arranged.

She told me that the next day, between 12 noon and 1 PM, Bajrang Dal volunteers would come to the Gopal Goshala. I was asked to be there and help with the transfer. A 407 vehicle was arranged and sent for the calf.

The rescue had moved from a lonely roadside to a coordinated effort involving strangers, volunteers and people willing to help.

THE PHOTO THAT BROUGHT RELIEF

A day later, I received a photograph of the calf.

He had been taken to a hospital in Patna, where his injured leg was put in a plaster. After that, he was welcomed at a cow-rescue centre in Aurangabad.

I cannot easily describe the feeling of seeing that photograph.

The calf who had been lying helpless beside NH-31, surrounded by foxes, had survived the first night. He had reached people who could continue his treatment. His story was no longer just about abandonment.

It had become a story about what happens when one person refuses to walk past suffering.

After receiving the good news, my mind finally became peaceful. I returned to my work as usual.

But I did not return as the same person who had walked along that road at 10 PM.

WHAT THIS CALF TAUGHT ME

We often speak about humanity in large words — kindness, religion, morality, compassion, duty. But sometimes humanity appears in a much smaller moment: a wounded animal lying alone in the dark.

He did not know my name. He could not thank me. He could not promise me anything. He simply needed someone to notice that he was suffering.

That is perhaps the purest test of compassion: helping a life that cannot repay you.

This story is not written to blame every person, every tradition or every livelihood. It is written to make us pause and ask difficult questions. When animals become products, when suffering becomes routine, when convenience becomes more important than life — what happens to our conscience?

We may disagree about many things. But surely we can agree on this: avoidable cruelty should never be our inheritance.

If we truly respect the cow family, then respect should be visible not only in words, rituals or symbols, but in everyday care — food, shelter, medical treatment, freedom from unnecessary suffering, responsible ownership and protection of abandoned animals.

And if we call ourselves human, then compassion must extend beyond our own species.

THE CALF WAS NOT A BURDEN.
HE WAS A LIFE.

A NOTE OF GRATITUDE

This rescue became possible because people chose to respond: Mr. Varun Sharma for standing beside the rescue effort; the woman who guided the next step; the volunteers who helped with transportation; the people at the goshala who eventually provided temporary shelter; and the medical team who treated the injured leg.

Most importantly, the story belongs to the calf — a voiceless life that survived because someone stopped.

If you ever find an injured animal, do not attempt risky treatment beyond your ability. Keep the animal safe from immediate danger, contact a qualified veterinarian or local animal-rescue organisation, and stay nearby if it is safe to do so.

A TRUE STORY OF A MALE CALF

♥ A LIFE LEFT TO DIE... BUT KINDNESS GAVE HIM A NEW LIFE ♥

“The real measure of our humanity is how we treat those who can do nothing for us.

– Compassion is our true religion.

One night at 10 PM on NH31 near NTPC Barh, I saw 2–3 foxes attacking a badly injured male calf. He was in so much pain that he couldn't even cry for help...

He had no one.
I became his voice.

WHAT I DID FOR HIM THAT NIGHT

1 I drove away the foxes and protected him.

2 I cleaned his wounds with DMAG spray.

3 Applied turmeric, camphor and covered him with branches to keep him safe.

4 I prayed for him (Om Namah Shivay & Mritunjay Mantra 11 times) and prayed to God to save him.

5 After 1 km, I got a lift and reached my room. But my heart stayed with that calf.

6 Next morning 5 AM, I returned to him with food, water and love.

THE JOURNEY OF HOPE ♥

I contacted everyone for help for 3–4 hours. Then I messaged Mr. Varun Sharma.

He responded with kindness and said, "I will be with you within one hour."

He reached, saw the condition and helped convince Gopal Goshala near Nawada Gate to keep him.

I also contacted a kind lady (NGO) and shared his photo and video.

She arranged his treatment and rescued him with Bajrang Dal volunteers and a 407 vehicle.

He was first taken to Patna hospital and his broken leg was treated.

Finally, he reached Aurangabad Goshala – a safe place, a new beginning, a new life.

WHAT THIS STORY TEACHES US

- ♥ Every life is precious.
- ♥ Animals feel pain, fear and love just like us.
- ♥ We exploit them in the name of tradition, business and selfishness.
- ♥ Compassion is our real religion.
- ♥ A little kindness can bring a big miracle.

BE A VOICE FOR THE VOICELESS.

BE KIND. BE HUMAN.

IF YOU CAN'T ADOPT, THEN SUPPORT.
IF YOU CAN'T SUPPORT, THEN DON'T HURT.
BECAUSE THEY HAVE ONLY ONE HOPE – US.

THANK YOU FOR CARING

COMPASSION COSTS NOTHING, BUT IT MEANS EVERYTHING.

♥ LET'S BUILD A WORLD WHERE NO ANIMAL IS LEFT TO SUFFER ALONE. ♥

Respect • Protect • Care
They are not our property,
they are our responsibility.
